WHO

The typical Hispanic caregiver is a 42.7-year-old female, who has provided care in the past 12 months (but isn't currently doing so) to one adult, a 65.3-year-old female relative.

WHAT

She has been providing care for 4.2 years on average, spending 31.2 hours a week helping with 2.1 ADLs (such as bathing or dressing),² 4.3 IADLs (such as running errands or managing finances), and medical or nursing tasks (such as wound care, giving injections, or managing medications). She is the primary, unpaid care provider for her loved one and provides care without the assistance of paid help. This amounts to a moderate to high burden of care.

WORK AND CAREER

She is employed, working on average 33.8 hours per week at her job. This caregiver is married or living with a partner, and is in very good or good health. She is a high school graduate or has less than a high school education. Her household income is $38,600, which is below the national median and the median for the average caregiver across all backgrounds.

ABOUT THE CARE RECIPIENT

The recipient typically lives with the caregiver or lives very close by (within 20 minutes).

This profile summarizes data from the Caregiving in the U.S. 2015 research study, jointly conducted with the National Alliance for Caregiving and AARP.¹ While the data presented below provide aggregate information about the average caregiver, it should be noted that the face of caregiving is changing. Family caregivers come in all variations and circumstances—from the grandson helping his grandmother out by cutting the grass and driving her to the store a couple hours a week; to the mother helping her adult son 10 hours a week with various activities due to his post-traumatic stress disorder; to the adult daughter caring for her mother with Alzheimer's; to the wife caring for her husband around the clock to deal with his stroke, diabetes, and wound care.

IMPACT OF PROVIDING CARE

On average, caregiving has not affected her health. It's a 50-50 toss-up as to whether she expects to continue to be a caregiver over the next 5 years, as well as 50-50 on whether she feels she had a choice in taking on care for her loved one. She reports little to no physical strain, a moderate to low amount of emotional stress, and little to no financial strain as a result of caregiving.

- 2 ADLs include those tasks that provide assistance with basic personal tasks such as bathing, dressing, using the toilet, transferring to or from a bed or chair, caring for incontinence, and eating. IADLs are supports for everyday tasks, including housework, managing money, taking medication, shopping for groceries or clothes, using communication devices (like telephones), and caring for pets, among others. About the National Alliance for Caregiving

Established in 1996, the National Alliance for Caregiving is a non-profit coalition of national organizations focusing on advancing family caregiving through research, innovation, and advocacy. The Alliance conducts research, does policy analysis, develops national best-practice programs, and works to increase public awareness of family caregiving issues. Recognizing that family caregivers provide important societal and financial contributions toward maintaining the well-being of those they care for, the Alliance supports a network of 80+ state and local caregiving coalitions and serves as Secretariat for the International Alliance of Carer Organizations.
